

Description of a Mini-COOL : interview with Alexandra Martin

Rubric	Text	Comments / questions / remarks ...
Title / Name	The power that can bring two sectors which a priori have nothing to do together: health and culture
Short Description	Interview with Alexandra Martin, director of "Pôle Culture &amp; Santé en Nouvelle Aquitaine", conducted on 22 April 2022 Culture and health together, it is like in third places the alliance of different sectors of activity, frictions: getting out of the logic of sectors, broadening the field of knowledge
Support / format Link	Recorded video interview
Tags / Keywords	Cross-sectoral approach,
Learning outcomes / audience	Third places actors
Links with the development of the Place-3T  Suggestion of situations where it could be of value	Usefulness of cross-sectoral approaches : advantage of the third type places Culture as an engine for the prevention of social problems
Longer description	Culture and health together : For example, we see how the presence of an artist in a health service will resonate with and involve the professionals. They will be able to see the artists' actions as a source of inspiration for themselves.

Links with existing supports / contents Links with experience etc.	That is the advantage of a third place, because it is more natural. But third places should be everywhere, in all of us. Culture as a motor for the prevention of social problems. To create a third place, a particular context is needed. Pablo Picasso used to say: To teach people something, you have to mix what they know with what they do not know. It is therefore interesting to offer a space where people recognise themselves, know what is there, and gradually mix with what they do not know. Maybe we need to reverse the pattern by saying that the culture is already there thanks to the new people, and then we will enrich it with other professionals.
Author / Owner	POUR LA SOLIDARITÉ - PLS	